Base Metal Related News

Base Metal prices dropped to its lowest level after U.S. President Donald Trump said he would slap a 10% tariff on the remaining $300 billion of Chinese imports from next month.

China and the U.S. concluded a new round of trade talks in Shanghai on Wednesday with little immediate evidence of progress being made.

US manufacturing activity slowed to a near three-year low in July and employment at factories shifted into a lower gear, suggesting a further loss of momentum in economic growth.

The reactivation of copper smelter Chuquicamata, the world's top copper producer, will be further delayed until the end of October this year after missing a previous target of April.

China strongly dissatisfied with US' latest tariffs announcement and firmly opposes it and hopes that US can rectify its mistakes as soon as possible

Base Metal Outlook

Base metals are trading down today. We expect base metal prices to trade negative after Trump fires China with fresh tariffs. China may soon put additional tariffs against US. One can maintain sell on rise strategy in Lead and Copper for the day.
