Base Metal Related News

Base metals prices were rangebound with pessimism caused by the novel coronavirus (2019-nCoV) outbreak in China being tempered slightly by an announcement by the country's finance minister over the weekend.

China's central bank lowered the rate on 200 billion yuan worth of one-year medium-term lending facility (MLF) loans to financial institutions, helping a rally on Chinese stock markets and other Asian bourses.

Several Chinese major zinc smelters are running at reduced output to prevent the quick build-up of sulfuric acid because a logistics lockdown caused by the coronavirus outbreak has dampened the sales outlook of the zinc smelting by-product.

Yuguang Gold & Lead has suspended operations at a 100,000 tonne-per-year zinc production line this week.

Copper prices rose on Monday, with the London contract hitting a three-week high, as China lowered interest rates on its medium-term loans to support an economy hurt by the coronavirus outbreak.

Base Metal Outlook

Base metals are trading mixed in international markets. We expect base metal prices to trade sideways to negative on fears over slowdown in automobiles sector in the first half of the year 2020. One can maintain sell on rise in Metals for the day.
