Precious Metals News

Gold prices slipped on Wednesday as the gradual easing of some coronavirus-led restrictions by several nations raised prospects of more global economic activity, denting demand for the safe-haven metal

The U.S. dollar rose for a fourth straight session, making gold costlier for investors holding other currencies

Trump said on Tuesday the White House coronavirus task force will wind down as the country moves into a second phase that focuses on the outbreak's aftermath, but he acknowledged there may be a resurgence of the virus as states loosen restrictions.

The German high court on Tuesday has challenged the European Central Bank's bond-buying authority, saying the ECB exceeded its powers.

The US ISM reported its nonmanufacturing index with a reading of 41.8% in April, down from March's 52.5%. However, the data was better than expected at 37.5%.

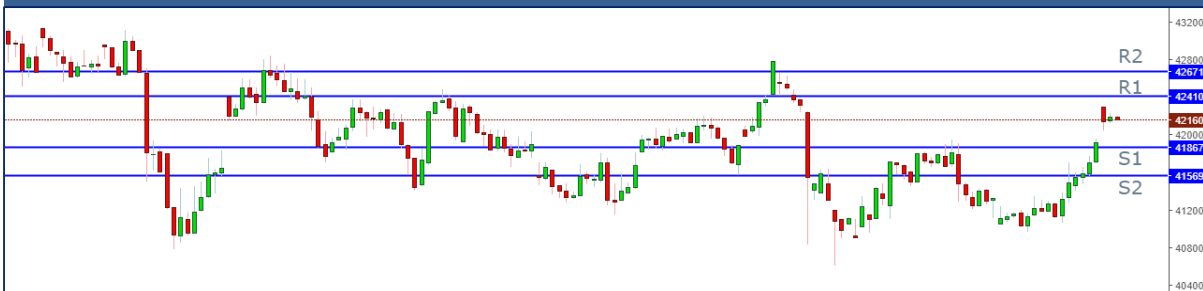

Precious Metal Outlook

Precious metals are trading flat in the morning trade. We expect prices to trade rangebound ahead of unemployment numbers in US and as some nations start to ease lockdown restrictions, optimism could start to pick up, less favoring gold's upside. Investors now eye the U.S. non-farm payrolls data, due later in the week, and the weekly jobless claims numbers.
